The river rose between three and four luches at Alton Wednesday night, and came up about two inches more vesterialy. Missouri Point is almost out of sight between the two rivers and the crops there are roined. The American Bottom, it is hoped, will except the fate of the low lands on the Missouri shore. The Madison levee, completed only last year at great cost and much hard labor, is relied upon to protect the lands there from overflow. It has proved its strength so far, and hopes are entertained that it will justify the confidence of those who built it and those who rely upon it for salvation from ruin.
